Coordinator Article

Strive for Excellence

I recently came across a YouTube channel of a European tile setter. The quality of his work is nothing short of stunning. Complete perfection in every aspect of his work. I look back on my own work with tile and I'm now ashamed of some of it. My customers seem pleased with my work, but his example spurs me on to do better. ('obkladačPraha' for those of you who are interested in who I'm talking about).

The Grammar Nazi in me cringes every day on Facebook. One high school friend is always greeting his "friends and family's", which drives me nuts. (I have discovered that another thing that drives people nuts is a vocal Grammar Nazi.)

But my mediocre tile work and Nazism aren't the only parts of me that need improvement. Several other things come to mind, and I'm sure others can point out many more.

In the same way that we can't see the 'egg on our faces,' so we can't always see our inner faults. During a Christian conference many years ago, I was challenged to go to my close friends and ask them to point out the blind spots in my life. I did this a number of times over the years, and it was always a very painful experience.

But it's one thing to know about your own faults, and another thing altogether to improve upon them. Our personalities are nearly impossible to change, and so we must do the best we can with what we have. But over the years, I have slowly managed to improve in a couple of areas of my life.

But of course, this isn't intended to be all about me - what about you? What do you see in your own life that needs work? If you don't see anything, then go to your friends and get them to point out your flaws. (tip - you usually have to drag it out of them, for friends don't want to hurt or offend you. Your enemies will gladly point them out).

Benjamin Franklin had an interesting method for improving himself. He would pick out one or two flaws from his list, and spend a week working on them as he did his daily work. Next week he would move on to a couple others to focus on, and would go back frequently to those which were particularly challenging.

It isn't going to come naturally. We won't improve without putting in some effort. Having a friend or partner in this is especially helpful. That's why many people hire a fitness coach to help them get into better physical shape - because it's so hard to do it all alone.

But let's not forget the Most Important Thing here - despite our flaws, faults, and personality issues, LOVE and FORGIVENESS are to be ever present. We are to love others in spite of their flaws, for we know that God loves us in the same way (but ever so much more!).

And even though we have faults, we mustn't let them be a driving force in our lives - we must forgive ourselves as well, knowing that we will never be perfect in this life, so we patiently await the day of our perfection in Christ, and focus more on doing his will, and not completely on fixing our flaws.

So to sum it all up:

- know your flaws, even if it needs the help of others for us to see them.
- it takes effort to work on improving these flaws. It helps to have a 'coach' in these efforts.

- forgive yourself for your flaws. You'll never be perfect, so don't let your flaws drive you.
- forgive others of their flaws. Yes, even their bad spelling and grammar.
- focus on serving Christ and fulfilling His mission for your life.

.Later this morning I'll be working on hanging drywall. As I work, I'll think about that tile setter and his excellence, but also about Col. 3:23-24 which gives us the reason for excellence:

"Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord, not for human masters, since you know that you will receive an inheritance from the Lord as a reward. It is the Lord Christ you are serving."

God bless! ~ Josh Peterson
